लेकिन फिर भी,
मैं हर सुबह खुद को लोड़ लेता हूँ -
इस नए हौसले के साथ।

क्योंकि मैं न सिर्फ इस सवाल नहीं,
इस जवाब भी हूँ -
जो अभी लिखा जाना बाकी है।

Which Home?

2-1986

They say "Go Home, you'll feel better," but which home do they mean?

The one where I stay quiet to avoid fights or the one I build inside my own head to survive?

I don't even cry out loud anymore
it feels safer that way,
like even my tears need permission to fall without being judged.

Sometimes I have their anger in my voice,
and it scares me more than anything like I'm slowly turning into everything I promised I'd never to be.

If home is where I belong
why do I feel so out of place there?
Why does my own room feel unfamiliar.
like I'm just a guest in my own life?

Maybe home isn't these walls
maybe its just a feeling I haven't found yet
but until then,
tell me ... Where do I go?

Silent Warriors of the Sea

20-1956

When we think about national security our minds often picture soldiers standing tall on borders. But far away from crowded cities and visible fortlines, there exists another battlefield - vast, deep and endlessly silent. This is where the Indian Navy lives its story.

The sea is beautiful but it is and never simple. Beneath its calm surface lies unpredictability - restless waves, sudden storms and an isolation that few can truly understand. For naval officers and sailors, this is not an occasional challenge. It is their everyday reality. They spend weeks and sometimes months away from home, missing festivals, family moments and ordinary life. Yet, they carry on because for them, duty is.

not just a responsibility — it is a quiet promise. Life in the Navy is not always about combat. In fact, much of their work happens when the world is not watching. They patrol invisible maritime borders, protect trade routes that keep the country running and stand ready during emergencies. When cyclones strike coastal areas or ships are in distress, it is often the Navy that arrives first — not for recognition but because help is need.

What makes the Indian Navy truly remarkable is not just its ships or submarines but the people behind them. Imagine standing on a deck in the middle of the ocean at night — no city lights, no familiar sounds — just a professional; they are a human being holding onto courage, discipline and hope. They learn to find strength in silence and companionship in their fellow crew members.

There is also a certain humility in their service. Unlike other forces that are often seen and celebrated, the Navy works in a space where their efforts go largely unnoticed. But perhaps that is what defines them — the ability to protect without being visible, to serve without expecting applause.

The Indian Navy teaches us a deeper meaning of patriotism. It shows that love for one's country is not always loud or dramatic. Sometimes, it is found in long nights at sea, in missed phone calls home, in standing alert when the rest of the nation sleeps peacefully. In the end, the Indian Navy is not just a defense force. It is a collection of human stories — of sacrifice, resilience and quiet bravery. They are the guardians of the silent blue sea, ensuring that even in the vast emptiness of the ocean, the spirit of a nation remains safe and strong.

What If the World Had No Internet?

If the internet had never existed, the world would have been very different from today's fast digital life. Mornings would have begun without the sound of message notifications or social media alerts. Instead of checking mobile phones immediately after waking up, people would have started their day by reading newspaper, taking with family members, or enjoying the calmness of the morning.

Children's lives would have been filled with outdoor adventures and real friendships. After school, boys would have gathered in open fields and streets to play cricket and football, shouting with excitement whenever someone scored a goal or hit a boundary. Instead of spending hours playing mobile games, they would have enjoyed running, sweating, and laughing together and enjoying the beautiful innocence of childhood.
